Ag officials release tiny wasps to combat pink hibiscus mealybug

Pink hibiscus mealybugs have been confirmed in three samples collected from the Jefferson Parish cities of Kenner, Marrero and Metairie, Commissioner of Agriculture and Forestry Bob Odom said.

These are the first confirmed pink hibiscus mealybug (PHMB) infestations in private, residential locations in Louisiana.

"Two years ago we found mealybugs on hibiscus plants in a retail garden center and the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry immediately took action so the bugs would not become established in the area," Odom said. "This time, after receiving calls from residents in Jefferson Parish, our inspectors sampled several sites and the results came back positive for the first three. An additional 87 locations in the area were inspected and 50 samples collected. We are waiting for the results to come back and more inspections are scheduled.

"The pink hibiscus mealybug is a serious threat to ornamentals and some of Louisiana's major crops including sugarcane, cotton, citrus, soybeans and sweet potatoes," Odom said. "While we do not want to find the pest in any Louisiana plants, we especially don't want it to have a severe economic impact on our farmers. We are trying to put up a good defense early on to stop the possible spread."

The bug sucks juices from the host plant and leaves behind toxic saliva as it feeds, which can cause deformity and death of the host plant.

Odom said two tiny parasitic wasps, Anagyrus kamal or Gyranoidea indica, are natural enemies of the PHMB and the best defense against the pest.

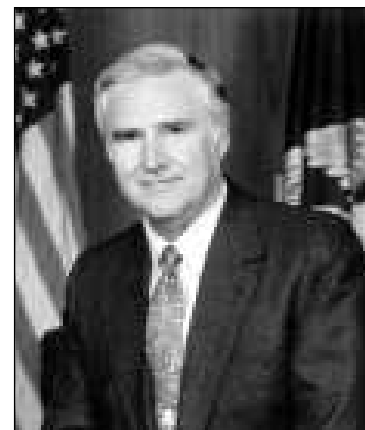

The parasitic wasps do not sting and are about the size of a gnat or small fly. It kills the PHMB by laying an egg inside the mealybug that eventually hatches a wasp larva. The larva feeds internally on the mealybug causing it to die.

About 7,700 of these wasps were released in Kenner, Metairie and Marrero. The wasps were obtained from a rearing facility in California with assistance from the USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service. LDAF inspectors will continue releasing wasps, from both California and Puerto Rico, on a weekly basis as additional positive sites are confirmed.

This is the most effective control for PHMB, so Odom cautioned homeowners about using pesticides and other treatments while the wasps are being released.

Odom said residents of outlying parishes should contact the department if they suspect PHMB infestation in their yard. Gardeners can view photos of mealybugs and infested plants at the LDAF Web site (www.ldaf.state.la.us) to learn what to look for when inspecting their plants. Anyone who suspects they have PHMB should call 225-952-8100 or email horticulure@ldaf.state.la.us.

Hibiscus is the preferred host for PHMB. Other host plants include roses, oleander, althea, allamanda, begonia, bougainvillea, croton, bottle brush, loquat, ficus, ornamental sweet potato, lantana, banana, schefflera and mums; however, if a homeowner has hibiscus, that is where the pest most likely will be.
